DISPATCHES FROM THE DIFFERENT PARTS OF THE STATES.

A Sorrowful Thanksgiving in New Jersey—The Sioux Indians Still Dancing—No Truth in the Reported Fight—The Schooner Halcyon to be Raised.

GREENVILLE, Miss., Nov. 28.—News received from Lake Washington say the small shot with which the son of Wade Hampton was shot has been extracted from the eye by the attending physicians, and he will probably not lose his sight. He is resting easy, with less pain.

Sorrowful Thanksgiving.

BOUNDBROOK, N. J., Nov. 28.—Thanksgiving-day was a sorrowful one for numerous friends of the McNabb family in Boundbrook. About 9 o'clock in the morning, James McNabb with a little child, and his brother Charles, wife and infant son, started to drive to Redington to spend the day. Before getting out of town, the horse, which became frightened, ran away. In its flight the animal fell, and the occupants of the carriage were thrown out. Chas. McNabb's little boy was instantly killed, his neck being broken. The other child escaped with a few bruises. James McNabb had one leg broken in two places, and is covered with bruises. Mrs. McNabb sustained an injury to one of her ankles and is prostrated by the shock.

Twice Mangled.

PARKERSBURG, W. Va., Nov. 28.—Geo. Wilson, while lying on the track of the Baltimore and Ohio South Western Railway last night, was killed by the down train in this city. The up train, two hours after struck his body which was still on the track. It was not until the train came down that the body was discovered.

Despondent and Died.

ANSONIA, Conn., Nov. 28.—David O'Connell, a man well-known in this place and once connected with the oldest families, committed suicide here this morning by cutting his throat. The cause of the deed was religious mania. O'Connell was a mechanic, and had been out of work for some time, a thing that had a bad effect on him. His suicide was preceded by a long period of prayer. For some time past he has continually prayed for work, the failure of which led to his suicide. He leaves a large family.

The Grand Stand Gives Way.

NEW YORK, Nov. 28.—Shortly before noon to-day one of the grand stands recently erected in the eastern part of Brooklyn to accomodate people attending the Yale-Princeton football match suddenly fell carrying with it a large number of persons. Many women are reported seriously injured.

With Renewed Vigor.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Nov. 28.—The department have received no telegrams in regard to the alleged fight between Indians and troops near Fort Keogh on Monday. The army officers discredit the reports in the official dispatches to the war department. The report of the Indian situation is improving except at Fort Reno, Indian territory, where the war dance among the Indians has broken out anew and is being carried on with renewed vigor.

Godfrey Downs Smith.

NEW YORK, Nov. 18.—The long-expected glove fight between George Godfrey, colored, of Providence, and Ed. Smith, of Denver, took place to-night at Hoboken, under the auspices of the Puritan Athletic Club, Long Island City, and resulted in a victory for Godfrey. Jere Dunn was referee, and held the $2,000 purse. From the start it was evident that Smith was overmatched. He made a game fight, however, and several times resumed work after he was apparently done for. Godfrey gained advantages in nearly every round, and in the twenty-third landed a heavy right-hander on Smith's ear. Smith staggered and nearly fell, and as he was making an effort to again put up his hands Referee Dunn stopped the fight, giving it to Godfrey.

Mrs. Partington Dead.

BOSTON, Nov. 28.—B. P. Shillaber, familiarly known as Mrs. Partington, died this evening at Chelsea, aged 76. For many years he has been a victim of rheumatism. He died of heart disease, having within a short time been prostrated by the latter affliction.

No Truth in It.

ST. PAUL, Nov. 28.—At the headquarters in Dakota no news of the reported battle with Indians near Fort Keogh, had been received this morning, and it is thought that there is not any truth in the report. Lieut. Woodruff stated to a United Press reporter that the Cheyennes Indians near Fort Keogh are all friendly and asked for permission to fight against the Sioux in case the latter should go on the warpath. Most of the Cheyenne Indians in the neighborhood of Fort Keogh have enlisted in the service of the Government. Lieut. Woodruff says if there had been a fight yesterday the department here would have been advised of it before this time.

Alaskan Salmon.

PORT TOWNSEND, Nov. 28.—The steamship Signal arrived in port last night from Southeastern Alaskan canneries. She brought down 11,500 cases and 410 barrels of salmon, besides unloading 5,500 cases at Vancouver for shipment east over the Canadian Pacific. The fish is to be taken direct to San Francisco. R. P. Ford, who chartered the steamer, came down on her as a passenger. She also brought down 15 white and 73 Chinese employees of the canneries. Colonel Ford says the season has been better than was anticipated, the catch having been much larger. Salmon is now worth $4.20 a case or $1.05 per dozen cans. Last year it was higher, being quoted at $1.37½ per dozen cans. The Signal only remained in port a short time. After taking on coal at Seattle she will go to San Francisco.

A Redesitated Chestnut.

NEW YORK, Nov. 28.—The World this morning prints a story thirteen columns in length to the effect that Charlie Ross, the long-lost kidnapped boy, at last is found. Detectives at the New York police headquarters seem to think they have discovered the boy in a Massachusetts city. Inspector Byrnes is working on the case.

To be Electrocuted.

NEW YORK, Nov. 28.—There is every probability now that the electrical execution will be tried for the second time some day next week in carrying out the death sentence imposed upon Joseph Wood, colored, for the murder of Chas. Ruffin, colored. The refusal of the supreme court of the United States to interfere in the case of the Japanese murderer, Shibuya Jagiro, on the issue that the sentence of death by electricity was cruel and unusual and therefore unconstitutional, has taken from the half dozen murderers awaiting death in the state prisons practically their last hope. Wood, the negro, confined in Sing Sing, will be the first to sit in the death chair unless there is some unlooked for delay in his case.

Another Big Strike Ordered.

BIRMINGHAM, Ala., Nov. 28.—An edict has gone forth, and more than 8000 miners will strike here Dec. 1. Wm. Scarffe, representing the national board of the miners union, is here and has issued an order to strike. He sent for all the mine owners to meet a committee of miners last night and to confer upon the proposed advance. Only one of them responded and the consequence was that Scarffe ordered the strike. It will affect Coalburghura, Pratt, Blue Creek and other mines. It is expected the strike will be a long and bitter one and the consequences are anticipated with trepidation in commercial circles here.

The Halcyon May be Raised.

SAN FRANCISCO, Nov. 28.—James Johnson, superintendent of the Japanese steamship company, who is on a visit here, brings the information that the Halcyon, which has been mentioned in connection with smuggling opium, was not wrecked as commonly supposed. She went ashore on the Japan coast during a heavy gale, but it appears that the officers of the vessel found that it would prove feasible to attempt to float the schooner again. They entered into a contract with the steamship company, of which Johnson is the superintendent, to have the Halcyon launched. It is probable, therefore, that the Halcyon will get to sea again.

A Home for Opium Fiends.

BALTIMORE, Nov. 28.—Mr. Hascal L. Taylor, a millionaire of Buffalo, N.Y., has purchased Radner Park in the western suburb of this city for $20,000. Mr. Taylor proposes to establish an asylum for the care of persons addicted to opium. Dr. Eugene Hamilton, of Buffalo, who made a cure in the case of a person in whom Mr. Taylor was deeply interested, after the patient had been given up by other physicians, will have charge of the institution.

A LITTLE TIME NEEDED.

The Oregon Improvement Company Will Come out all Right.

SAN FRANCISCO, Nov. 27.—John L. Howard, the local agent of the Oregon Improvement company, asserts that if time be only given the whole of the indebtedness will be paid. He lays the blame of the whole matter on the stringency of the New York money market. In November, 1889, the company mortgaged the whole of its plant for $15,000,000. Since that date the Pomona and City of Puebla have been purchased from the Pacific Coast Steamship company for sums aggregating about $800,000. The whole of this sum save $100,000, has been paid, and it was for that amount that the First National bank attached the Puebla. This was done in view of the fact that a petition was before the courts in Portland to have a receiver appointed.

As the Puebla and Pomona were bought after the mortgage was given, the San Francisco creditors think they can attach these two vessels to secure themselves. The Pomona will be due here in a few days. It is expected that on her arrival a number of attachments will be issued against her.

The Puebla is still tied up at the wharf. The Queen sailed for Puget Sound in her place to-day with a large cargo and about 150 cabin and steerage passengers.

Should the Pomona be attached, the Pacific Coast Steamship Company will have the Corona to fall back upon, so no inconvenience to travel is likely to ensue.

Howard said to-day that he expected the whole matter to be arranged within the next few days. He is in communication with the authorities at New York, and expects to hear every hour that the attachments have been raised. He does not think that the appointment of a receiver will affect the business of the company in San Francisco.

Attachments have been levied on the property of the Oregon Improvement Company by the South Prairie Coal Company, to recover a claim of $20,000, and A. W. Follansbee, to recover his claim of $28,000.

Advices received from New York by the manager of the company are more encouraging, and it is now thought that arrangements will be made to pay the interest on the bonds of the company.

Old Boilers Blew Up.

SAN JOSE, Cal., Nov. 28.—The powder mill at South Bay, which was wrecked by a terrific explosion on Tuesday, took fire early yesterday morning, and burned down. The owner will not rebuild. The dead from the explosion now number eight, Pat Lynch, Richd. Hayes and Frank Galt having succumbed to their injuries. J. Douglas' recovery is doubtful. It now appears that a number of the six boilers which exploded were used in the Westhead mill which blew up 14 years ago.

Antipodean Boat Race.

SYDNEY, N. S. W., Nov. 28.—Bubear of England, and Matterson of Australia, yesterday rowed a sculling race for a hundred pounds a side. Bubear won.

Conspiring Against the Government.

CONSTANTINOPLE, Nov. 27.—Twenty Armenian officials have been arrested at Lonid, charged with conspiring against the government.

THE LEADING TOPIC.

PARNELL REGAINING FAVOR AMONG THE NATIONALISTS.

The Outcome of Monday's Meeting Eagerly Waited For—The Disgraced Leader Puts a Straight Question to his Friends—The Land Bill Passes Unopposed.

NEW YORK, Nov. 28.—Dillon and Timothy Harrington passed a quiet day in this city, and left last night for Cincinnati. A reporter interviewed Mr. Dillon this afternoon as to the probable effect of Gladstone's letter. He seemed considerably agitated over the turn affairs had taken within the past few days. He said: "I don't wish to express any decided opinion, as yet. While we are surprised at the way matters have turned out, we think everything will come all right. To-morrow we shall have a committee meeting in Cincinnati, and the result will be given to the press." "Will we ask Mr. Parnell to resign?" said Dillon, with a smile. "Well, you will see to-morrow." Dillon's actions indicated that this was the only way out of the matter, and just before leaving he told a prominent Irishman that probably that course would be pursued.

LONDON, Nov. 27.—Messrs. Healy and Parnell were in conference together in the library of the House of Commons for some time to-day. The feeling among the Nationalists seems to have become more favorable to Parnell since yesterday, and an opinion prevails that at Monday's meeting of the party, Parnell will be sustained. An analysis of the vote at the various meetings of the Parnellites on the question of Parnell's retention of the leadership, shows that the most eminent members of the party group favored Parnell's retirement, while the fifty men who were insisting in season and out of season, upon his remaining at the head of affairs in spite of everything, were those of comparatively minor ability or individual influence. The solid phalanx of a hundred is made up of the men who are most dependent upon the salaries which Parnell has it in his power to distribute, by virtue of his undisputed privilege of naming the parliamentary candidates in the various Irish districts.

It is learned that Parnell put the direct question to every man in the room.

"ARE YOU GOING TO DESERT ME?"

The ordeal was a difficult one for these dependent members to withstand. Still it is believed that if O'Brien and Dillon came out flatly in favor of Parnell's retirement there will be found enough waverers in the ranks of the faithful to make up a majority against his continuance in office. The news that O'Brien had cabled his opinion that the Irish party should accede to Gladstone's views in the Parnell matter created a marked sensation to-day and was received with joy by the English Liberals and with satisfaction by many of the Irish members, though as it was understood that O'Brien spoke only for himself and not for his fellow envoys, and also that his decision was not described as final, the cablegram was not looked upon as bringing the matter much nearer to a conclusion.

A PARLIAMENTARY SURPRISE.

The ease with which the land bill was put through its preliminary stage, today, was a surprise, in view of the stubborn resistance to it at every stage on former occasions. The government leaders are jubilant over the series of accidents lucky for them, though disastrous for others, which has weakened the opposition, and they are making all the hay they can while the sun shines. The attitude of the great parties has been completely changed by the recent happenings. Liberals who, under the leadership of Gladstone and Morley, were prepared for an active assault upon the government, seemed paralyzed, and, the Tories, instead of being on the defensive, are aggressive and triumphant.

BALFOUR EXPLAINS HIS BILL.

In the House of Commons to-day, Balfour, chief secretary for Ireland, introduced the Irish land purchase bill. In explaining the measure he said that the government's policy was the same as in 1889, but for the sake of simplicity the bill had been cut in halves. Both portions, taken together, presented practically the same measure as that of 1889. One variation which had been made, met in some degree, the views of Parnell. Parnell suggested that the privilege of purchase be confined to tenants of holdings under £50 valuation. Though Balfour could not accept exactly that limitation he had enlarged the scope of the bill by excluding all purely grazing farms and farms on which tenants did not reside. Another change was one in reference to the objection taken at last session to the limit of 20 years' purchase then proposed. That limit did not appear in the new bill. (Hear, hear). Power would also be given the Viceroy of Ireland to extend the period of five years, during which eight per cent. of the purchase money was payable. In regard to an increase of the power of the local authorities, Balfour said the land question was largely used for political objects, and to would, therefore, be absurd to leave it under the excitement of an agitator of local communities to determine whether they should adopt the remedy going to the root of the agrarian discontent.

Labouchere moved an amendment against the pledge of Imperial credit for the purchase of land, until the country gives consent at a general election.

The amendment was rejected, 269 to 117. Gladstone, Morley and Sir Wm. Harcourt walked out of the House before the division. Parnell and all the Parnellite members voted with the Government. The bill was read a first time.

THE QUESTION OF THE DAY.

Lord Spencer, speaking to-day at Bromley, said that Gladstone's letter to Morley in regard to Parnell, had struck a note in harmony with the feelings of all Liberals. The Irish party had been too severely criticised on account of their attitude. They owed a debt of the deepest gratitude to Parnell, and he honored them for not in a moment throwing over their leader. When the higher consideration of the permanent welfare of their country came into operation they would respond to the appeal of the English Liberals and ask Parnell to retire. It would be a mighty misfortune to Ireland, the Empire and the Liberal party if Parnell remained in office. Lord Spencer's opinions would not be altered in that case. He would still resist coercion, but he would cut away from the old policy, and try a new one.

Healy is reticent as to the purport of his conference with Parnell to-day. Parnell seems to have regained his good spirits and displays buoyancy and excellent health. It was noticeable when Parnell, in going to record his votes on Labouchere's amendment, passed the Liberal men of the House he studiously ignored them. They declare that if Parnell remains in office, Sexton and other Irish members who favor his retirement will apply for Chiltern Hundreds, in order to seek re-election and test the feeling of the people.

The Clergy Against Parnell.

LONDON, Nov. 28.—Intense excitement was created in political circles generally this morning, but more particularly in the ranks of the Irish Nationalist party when the announcement was made that the Roman heirachy of Ireland had reached the unanimous conclusion that the position was such as to render absolutely necessary the retirement of Parnell from the leadership of the Irish party.

BLACK DIAMOND NOTES.

Three Accidents—Docket for the Assizes—Y. M. C. A. Secretary.

From the Free Press.]

A miner named Harris, was hurt at the Northfield mine yesterday, by a fall of rock.

A son of Mr. Richards, of Wellington, had his arm put out of joint in the mine yesterday.

A son of Mr. Chas. Willegeus, was severely hurt at Wellington yesterday morning by a runaway horse. He was driving a horse belonging to Dunsmuir & Sons, which ran away and threw the boy out, injuring his legs badly, and it is feared that there are also internal injuries. The boy very pluckily tried to stop the horse but without avail.

There are two cases to be tried at the coming assize on Tuesday next, viz: the Chinese attempted murder case and a like charge against John Adderton. The jurors have been already summoned to judge the cases which it is believed will be tried before Sir Chief Justice Begbie.

Cedar and Cranbery districts are to have an Episcopal church.

Mr. E. W. Freure, for several years assistant secretary of the Y.M.C.A., at Vancouver, has been appointed secretary at Nanaimo.

A party of commercial travelers gave an entertainment and dance in the Nanaimo opera house last evening in aid of the hospital fund.

If you have a Cold, use Langley's Balsam of Aniseed.

LEGAL INTELLIGENCE.

Court circles are much interested in the case of the City vs. J. P. Walls, which was decided yesterday in favor of the defendant. The circumstances of the case are that the barristers of British Columbia had determined to contest the right of the legislature to demand of them the payment of a license before they could practise, notwithstanding the fact that they had been duly admitted by the Supreme Court and paid the usual fees. In addition to this the barristers maintain a law library at great expense to themselves, not for their own exclusive benefit, but for that of the judges as well. They argue that doctors, lawyers, surveyors, civil engineers, and other professional men are allowed to go free. The case of Mr. J. P. Walls, secretary of the Law Society, was taken as a test, the general feeling being against the tax. Only two or three lawyers have paid, and in these cases legal families are divided against themselves. Mr. Yates made an able argument of the case yesterday, and won it, but on a legal point. The case instead of having been brought before the county court, should first have been presented in the city police court, and it was on these grounds that the Chief Justice dismissed the action with costs.

SUPREME COURT—CHAMBERS.

(Before Mr. Justice Drake.)

November 28.

Jas. Gillespie vs. Black et al—Defendants' counsel applied for leave to amend statement of defence. Adjourned till to-day. T. J. Walker for plaintiff; Davie and Bodwell for defendant.

CHAPTER XXIV.

EXPLANATIONS.

Dr. Cameron wishes to see Mr. Gryce, Mr. Gryce was ready to see Dr. Cameron.

The meeting of the two was peculiar. Each had something to say and the other knew it. It was Mr. Gryce who at last broke the silence.

"I have learned a fact," said he, "which I think it is your right to know. It depends upon what affects your pride and whether in seeking a wife you had any other views than those that could be met by her youth, her beauty and her wealth."

Dr. Cameron smiled bitterly. "Do not let any fear of wounding my self-esteem stand in your way."

"I only wish to prepare you for what will probably prove a surprise. And yet why should I take that for granted; you look like a man who has made discoveries too."

"My discoveries are not your discoveries," asserted the doctor, "yet why should I take that for granted? Tell me the result of your labors and I will respond if necessary by telling your mine.

"Very good," returned the detective. "You will pardon me if I begin with a question. When you married Miss Gretorex so called——"

"So called?"

"Did you not suppose that you were marrying the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Gretorex?"

"Certainly—of course, why?"

"They let you think so? Did not tell you she was only their child by adoption, and the destined inheritor of their wealth, but not of their blood and lineage any more than this poor Mildred Farley was?

The surprise of the doctor, so great as to almost render him speechless, was his best reply. The detective immediately proceeded.

"Then you were made the victim of a deception," he declared, firmly. "Genevieve Cameron is your wife, but she is not the child of Mr. and Mrs. Philo Gretorex. She was adopted by them when she was a babe. Do you wish to hear any particulars of the affair?"

"I most certainly do," he returned; "but first reassure me in one regard. My wife—"

That name could not pass his lips without a struggle. He paused and looked imploringly at the detective.

"I understand you," the latter responded. "You wish to know if she was a party to the deception? Let me first give you the details of her adoption."

Dr. Cameron drew a deep sigh. Those tremendous blows, one after the other, were telling upon him.

"I am listening," he observed; but his eyes had a far-away look, as if they rested upon objects remote from those contained in this barren office. And they were.

Mr. Gryce commenced in his easy, colloquial way to say,

"Twenty years Philo Gretorex was the owner of stock in a railroad, but he was not so rich nor had he yet become so powerful that he could not take a journey or undertake any project without attracting to himself the attention of the social as well as the financial world. When, therefore, he and his wife decided one summer upon taking a trip for the benefit of Mrs. Gretorex's health, which really had not been good, they made these stops often, and the longest one and the most fruitful, as you will presently discover, was in a small village called M——. I can locate it exactly when you wish me to do so. Here they remained a month, and when they went away they carried with them a female infant whom they henceforth presented to the world as their own, under the name of Genevieve. I have the inner history of the matter from the woman who was present at the birth of the child, and afterwards saw it transferred from the real parent to this rich but childless lady from New York. The circumstances were as follows: Mrs. Farley—you start at that name, yet you must have already guessed it—was a woman who had been suddenly bereft of her husband and all means of livelihood, at a blow. She lived in the same hotel at which Mr. and Mrs. Gretorex were then boarding, and the day had come for her to give birth to a child. Her room adjoined that of the New York lady, and though they had barely met in the halls and on the portico, Mrs. Gretorex possessed sufficient of the milk of human kindness to take a certain superficial interest in her unfortunate neighbor. She was with her more or less during the day, and when she heard the child cry—it was night, but she was not deterred by that fact, she rose and hastened into Mrs. Farley's room. An unexpected sight met her eyes. There were two and the poor woman did not know how she was going to support one!"

"Stop!" came from Dr. Cameron in hoarse and difficult tones. "You are speaking of my wife, and—"

"The poor girl who looked so much like her, that we both took her for Miss Gretorex."

A strange smile flitted over the doctor's pale lips, and that far-away gaze returned.

"They were sisters, then?"

"They were sisters."

The silence which followed this speech was broken at length by the doctor.

"Go on with your story," he commanded. "I think I can see what happened."

"Yes, it is evident," rejoined the detective. "Mrs. Gretorex had no children. Approaching the infants, she looked at them both, and found they were equally healthy, pretty and promising. 'What would I not give for one of you,' she cried, and turning, glanced at the mother. Her words and her look were like a sudden gleam of light to the weak and almost despairing woman. Raising her hand, she looked at the relative who was with her and smiled as that relative nodded her head; then she glanced at the doctor. 'Mrs. Gretorex is a person of means,' that gentleman declared. 'If she wants one of these little fatherless ones, you might do worse than let her have her.' The poor woman clasped her hands. 'Are you in earnest?' she cried. 'Would you take—do you want—' 'I will consult my husband,' the lady interposed. 'Have the children dressed, and in an hour I will return.' And so she left them, and when she came back, there were the two infants laid side by side on the bed with the mother, making a picture such as you seldom see, the nurse declared. And the good lady went up to them and looked at them again, and seemed still more pleased and settled in her resolve than she had been before, and finally declared, 'I will take one of these children and bring it up as my own, and bequeath it my name and probably my fortune, upon one condition, and that is that if you give her to me you will give her to me utterly and neither try to follow her fortunes, nor concern yourself in any way with her affairs. Are you ready to promise this and promise it upon the Bible?' The poor mother turned her face to the wall, but her hand seemed to grope for the Bible which lay on a little stand near by. Annis—which was the relative's name, and who as far as I can learn was the widow's adviser on this occasion—placed the book in it, and looked on while the poor broken-down woman kissed it. The choosing of the child was the next step. They had been laid side by side, and to all human eye there was not the shade of difference between them. But without pause or hesitation she stooped over and took the one lying furtherest from her grasp, and with this burden held awkwardly to her breast she went quickly out of the room, and only the little dent left in the pillow remained to tell the story of the vanished babe."

"Oh!" burst from Dr. Cameron's lips in a heavy sigh, as his two arms opened with an involuntary gesture.

"This was the beginning," resumed Mr. Gryce, "of the separation between the sisters. It looked as if it would be a final one, for early in the morning, almost before daybreak, I believe, Mr. and Mrs. Gretorex, her nurse—she did not travel without one in those days—and the babe—had left the town. Poverty held Mrs. Farley in the west, and for ten years she heard nothing and knew nothing of the child she had given away. She took lodgings in Bleecker street, and recommended the old struggle for existence under less favorable auspices than before. But she was near the child she parted with, and she was where she had every facility for educating Mildred, and she allowed these two facts to content her. When Mrs. Farley first saw the child who upon growing up became your wife, I cannot be quite sure. With all my efforts I have but succeeded in gaining but the barest outline of these days which must have been so full of emotion for this broken-down but still lovely and unsatisfied woman. That she did see her more than once at this time is evident. But that she broke her oath by speaking to the child we have no proof, nor is it to be presumed she did. We have even the record of a day when, after a walk of miles, she came to the house where Mrs. Gretorex was living, only to observe her daughter driving away from the door in a carriage. She felt herself strangely unnerved by this incident, and only realized what a spectacle she was making of herself, when she noticed the passers-by turn and look at her as she stood there wringing her hands and moaning feebly to herself. Meanwhile, without especial pride or satisfaction, she saw Mildred advance in mind and improve in a thousand ways; but her deepest thoughts, greatest anxiety, her deepest longings, were for the proud and dainty Genevieve, who, like as not, passed her with a stare of haughty enquiry, or that worse aspect of utter indifference, which would be most natural under the circumstances. To see her at her side, to hear her speak the word mother, was worth the sacrifice of her existence; and when both girls reached the estate of womanhood, and she beheld one toiling with uncomplaining affection to supply her failing health with the comforts she needed, it was not on her account she summoned up strength for those long walks through the city streets, but to catch a glance of that other one, riding by in her carriage in an atmosphere of wealth and fashion that must have almost overwhelmed the poor woman. The extreme likeness between the sisters added to this effect and was the reason, perhaps, why she never took Mildred with her on these expeditions. And did Mildred know the secret of her mother's conduct and frequent despairs? you now naturally ask. It is to be supposed so. There are words scattered through these same letters which show that the less favored child had moments of rebellion against the splendor and love which surrounded her more fortunate sister. And so the days went by and the moment came which changed all their lives and led in some strange and as yet uncomprehended way to the tragedy in which we are specially interested. I allude to the instant when Mrs. Farley broke her oath and the silence of years, and informed Miss Gretorex of the falsity of her relationship to the woman she called mother, and her true relationship to herself and the girl who had solicited her custom and demanded her patronage. It took place through Mildred, and I am disposed to think in Miss Gretorex's room. But my details on this subject are very meagre, owing to the fact that Mrs. Farley wrote but one letter after this period and that a very disjointed and unsatisfactory one. Her end was near, and beyond wild expressions of thankfulness that she had been at last allowed to clasp her darling Genevieve in her arms, there is little to enlighten the recipient or us. But we can surmise that in connection with what Mrs. Cameron has told us of her first meeting with the youthful dressmaker, came that dressmaker's startling revelation of their relationship followed by an appeal which finally brought the wealthy young lady to the poor widow's bed-side. For more than one person at Mrs. Olney's boarding-house remembers the day when a private carriage drove up to the house, and an elegant lady, closely veiled, descended and made her way without inquiry to Mrs. Farley's room, with the ostensible purpose of having a dress fitted. But her stay lengthened into hours, and much wonderment was created. More than once during Mrs. Farley's illness her carriage was seen in front of the house, and once after Mrs. Farley died."

There was silence; Mr. Gryce had evidently finished his story. With an effort the doctor roused himself.

"Do you know if she ever met Dr. Molesworth in any of these visits she paid her mother?"

Mr. Gryce shook his head and somewhat equivocally replied:

"We have not got to the end of our inquiries yet."

"Then," was the doctor's grim conclusion, "this discovery that my wife was sister to the girl who died in her room has not satisfied you that she was innocent of her death?"

"It has made the theory of suicide seem less improbably. While it is hard to imagine that a seamstress would be initiated into the secrets of Miss Gretorex's jewel-casket, a sister might. Yet—"

"You are not perfectly satisfied," finished the doctor,

"I am ready to be made so," the detective suggested. "I ask nothing better than to have my mind cleared of every doubt. As proof of it I am willing to talk over probabilities with you for another half hour. For instance, do you think her dread of having you learn her true parentage was enough to account for the extreme suffering which blanched her hair in a night and laid her in a state of insensibility at our feet?"

The doctor was silent.

Mr. Gryce's look and tone became almost fatherly.

"I have seen much of life," he pursued, "and much of women. Forced by my business into scenes trying to every faculty of their mind and emotional nature, it has been my lot to behold them in their love, their hate, their triumph and their despair; and I have found that though they can feign much, conceal much, bear much, they succumb only when they own a frightful secret and can see no way of hiding it any longer."

No sooner had these words passed his lips than the doctor's face lost the peculiar look it had hitherto worn, and with a start, he vehemently cried:

"At the sacrifice of every particle of pride yet left me after the scourging process to which I have been subjected, I will tell you what that secret is. To save her I could scarcely do more, and yet to save her I would willingly give my life."

"Let me hear it," answered the detective. "If it is a secret that can be kept without violation of our duty, be assured that no one beside the inspector and myself shall ever know it."

Dr. Cameron looked at the detective, and said slowly:

"Do you know why the woman whom we saw through the curtain at the C—— Hotel, looked so astoundingly like my wife that we found it impossible to suppose her to be any one else?"

Mr. Gryce smiled.

"Why, I have just told you," said he. "She was Mildred Farley, your wife's twin sister, as like her—"

"You mistake," was the dry interruption. "She whom we saw that day was not Mildred Farley, but Genevieve Gretorex; in other words my wife herself, or she who afterwards became so."

TENDER AS A BABE.

That Is Why an Irish Barber Sympathized with His Victim.

The village of Garrison's, on the Hudson, is the home of a few wealthy city people during the heated term, says the New York Sun. Garrison's is not populous enough to support a regular barber, and so this very necessary function has been assumed by the baggage-man at the Hudson river railroad station, who is known as Dan. It is a funny sight to see a lawn-tennis dandy with yellow shoes lying in an ordinary arm-chair, his head over the back and resting on the book in which Dan keeps his accounts, and which lies upon a desk. For scraping the jowls of the city boarders the baggage-man earns many a dime between trains.

This reminds the writer of an experience in the Arran islands, on the west coast of Ireland, last February. He had three weeks' growth of beard on his face, and he hunted over the three islands for a barber, at last finding one who was willing to undertake the job. The Arran barber had never shaved a Yankee, and was overjoyed at the chance. He was twenty years old, and had been engaged all his life at building stone walls. He sharpened his razor on a piece of smooth flagstone, and seated his victim in a kitchen chair. One man held the patient's head, and a dozen interested spectators looked on, for it was an altogether unprecedented event in the islands. The lathering was done with a piece of hard brown soap, which was rubbed over the face. Grabbing a handful of hair on top of the patient's head, the stone-wall builder flourished the razor in the air and exclaimed:

"Are ye all ready, sir?"

"All right," was the trembling reply. Down came the razor with a sweep like that of a scythe. The implement was evidently as full of teeth as a buzzsaw. It tore the hair out by the roots. It raised the victim bolt upright as if a cannon cracker had exploded. Tears gathered in his eyes. His hands clinched convulsively, and a rivulet of blood ran down his cheek. The butcher went to the window to wipe his weapon clean. While standing there he looked up and exclaimed sympathetically:

"Shure, sir, ye have a face as tindher as a little babby!"

The shave was concluded three weeks later in the city of Galway.

An Engraved Needle.

There is a needle in the possession of Queen Victoria which represents the column of Trajan in miniature. Scenes in the life of the Queen are represented in relief, but so finely cut and minute that it requires a magnifying glass to see them. In addition to this it contains a number of needles of smaller size, each of which is equally minutely engraved.

OH, MY BACK!
STOP IT NOW,

I have been troubled many years with disease of the kidneys and have tried many different remedies and have sought aid from different physicians without relief. About the 15th of April I was suffering from a very violent [illegible] such a manner that I was bent over. When I sat down it was almost impossible for me to get up alone, or to put on my clothes, when kind Providence sent Dr. Healey, with the DRAGON KIDNEY TEA, to my hotel. I immediately commenced using the tea. It had an almost miraculous effect, and to the astonishment of all the guests at the hotel, in a few days, I am happy to state, that I was a new man. I will recommend the tea to all afflicted as I have been.

THE SPECTRAL VISITOR.

Mrs. Clare Gets the Better of a Designing Female.

"If you could give her any employment, Mrs. Clare, it would be a real act of Christian charity," said good old Mr. Owens.

Mrs. Clare looked doubtful. She had come down into the country, with her heart full of peace and good-will toward men—and women, into the bargain. She had not much money to give—she had come to Middle Marshes to economize. That was the secret of her taking the lonely cottage on the edge of the hemlock copse, where the wind sighed so funereally of an evening, and the red reflections of the spring sunsets seemed to turn the low-lying pools to blood. She was the wife of a sea captain, whose biennial voyages to China and Japan seemed like lifetimes; and she had a small income, and four little children to bring up. But work—that was, perhaps, within her power to bestow; and yet she hesitated, as Mr. Owens spoke.

"But she is such a peculiar looking person," said Mrs. Clare. "Do you notice she never lifts her eyes to one's face? And such strange eyes, too—full of greenish lights, like a cat's. And, then, her hair is so colorless and dry, exactly like the faded grass along the edge of the marsh; and there is such a peculiar, disfiguring scar upon her cheek."

Mr. Owens laughed a fat, oily, comfortable laugh.

"But, my dear madam," said he, "how very illogical that is. After all, we are none of us responsible for our looks. And they tell me she is an excellent seamstress. And, more than this, she has had a disappointment."

"A disappointment!" said Mrs. Clare.

"You wouldn't think it, would you?" said Mr. Owens.

"Yes; she was engaged to a young carpenter of the neighborhood. But work was slack, and the carpenter didn't see his way clear to matrimony. So he has gone to the next seaport town to work at ship-building, and Mary Moore is left to wear the willow."

"Poor thing!" said Mrs. Clare; and she resolved to conquer her prejudices at once. Mary Moore was summoned to Ivy Lodge and set to work, and profuse were her expressions of gratitude.

"I hope you like the cottage, ma'am," said Mary, one day, as she sat at her work in the bay window.

"Oh, yes," said Mrs. Clare, earnestly.

"You don't find it lonely, eh, ma'am?"

Mrs. Clare shivered slightly.

"A little," she acknowledged. "Toward evening, sometimes."

"Ah!" said Mary Moore, biting off her thread. "I thought so. I knew all about the house. I lived here, ma'am, ten years, as maid to Mrs. Hodges, as owns the place. She couldn't stand it, ma'am, so she's gone to Florida."

"Couldn't stand what?" asked Mrs. Clare, with some curiosity.

"The sights, ma'am," said Mary, lowering her voice mysteriously. "And the sounds."

"Nonsense!" said Mrs. Clare.

"Ah, ma'am, that's what a many has said before you," said Mary. "Seven families has lived here since my old missis went to Florida, and not one of 'em has stayed over the three months. All because of —".

"Of what?" said Mrs. Clare, as the woman paused.

"Of the ghost, ma'am, if you will have it," answered Mary Moore.

Mrs. Clare burst out laughing. "I never heard any thing so ridiculous in all my life," said she. "Do, pray, take a little more pains with those button-holes, Mary, and let the ghost alone; and I'll wager that it will not trouble us."

Mary sewed away in silence, with the greenish eyes fixed intently on her work, and the thin lips tightly compressed. She had scattered the seed; it was only to wait, now, for it to germinate.

Little Kate came running breathlessly in, that very evening.

"Mamma! Mamma!" cried the child; "a white lady waving her arms out of the back window! Is it the poor lady who was murdered by the Indians before the house was built? Cook says it was! And cook is going to-morrow, and so is Emma Jane!"

Mrs. Clare stepped out into the fading twilight and herself reconnoitered the ground.

"My dear," said she, "you are mistaken. There is nothing there but the white mist rising out of the river and the hemlock boughs waving in the wind."

"Yes, I know," said little Kate, who was clinging to the skirt of her mother's dress; "but there was a white lady there—all white; her hair and her hands and the vail over her head—leaning out of the back window over the dairy."

Mrs. Clare lighted a lamp and went directly to the room in question, an unused apartment, which served chiefly for the storage of old trunks, boxes and chests. It was as she had expected—all quiet and empty.

"There, Katie," said she; "now you see how foolish you were to be so frightened."

"But I did see a white lady," persisted little Kate.

The two servants left the next day in a panic of foolish superstition.

"Never mind, ma'am," said Mary, "I'll stay. It ain't pleasant, I know, to feel as there's supernatural creeturs glidin' all around and peeping at you through the cracks in the door, but I'm used to it. And my duty! the first thing I thinks of, ma'am."

"You are a good girl, Mary," said Mrs. Clare, "and, I dare say, I shall get other servants before long."

"I hope so, ma'am," said Mary, dubiously. "But I can't say. Most of them as goes out to service around here has a mortal dread of Ivy Lodge!"

The stable-boy, a bright little fellow, whom Mrs. Clare had brought with her from the city, was the next person to whom the white lady appeared. He, too, left at once, without even waiting for the balance of wages due him.

"What shall I do?" said Mrs. Clare, piteously.

"There's Fern Manor, ma'am, across the river, to let," suggested Mary Moore, with her faded eyelashes cast down. "It's a very nice modern house, ma'am, and—"

"Its out of the question," said Mrs. Clare; "entirely out of the question. The rent of Fern Manor is twice what we pay here."

"But one can have peace and quietness there," said Mary, obsequiously.

"And I'll have it here," said Mrs. Clare, resolutely, "or I'll know the reason why. I'll be conquered by no senseless phantoms, nor yet by the silly stories of vulgar gossips."

"Just as you please, ma'am," said Mary, a little crisply; and she went back to the kitchen to see that the biscuits did not brown too much.

The night closed in wild and windy, with sweeps of rain rattling against the casements and the trees groaning in the blast. Mrs. Clare sat up late, reading and writing to her husband, and the clock struck twelve before she rose to go to her own room.

A violent draught of wind blew out her light as she entered the hall, and, in the sickly gleam of the hanging lantern above she saw a white, spectral figure at the end of the passage—something which seemed to wave its arms and retreat slowly as she advanced.

For a second her blood seemed to stand still in her veins; her head swam. Her first impulse was to fly in terror and cry out for help; her second to make a brave stand.

Springing forward, she clutched at the white shadow. Once, twice it evaded her, but the third time she succeeded in grasping it tightly—something of flesh and blood like herself. Tearing the white, floating drapery away, she revealed the shrinking figure and conscience-stricken face of—Mary Moore!

"So," said she, coolly, "you were the ghost, after all! I had begun to suspect it before this. Now, tell me how long this has been going on, or I will have you locked up in State's prison for the rest of your life!"

And thus exhorted, Mary Moore made full confession of her peccadillos.

It transpired that old Mrs. Hodges, whose maid she was for ten years, had partly promised Ivy Lodge—or the use of it, rather—to her, when she should be married to Isaac Smiley, the young ship-carpenter, and she had anticipated the letting of lodgings; perhaps, even, a house full of summer boarders to eke out their livelihood. But when the real estate agent came to look at it, he declared that it was a great deal too good to be donated after this fashion. And he persuaded Mrs. Hodges to have it repaired and painted and let, ready furnished, for her own personal benefit. Of course, this was a cruel disappointment to Mary Moore and her faint-hearted swain, the carpenter.

"She has played me false, after all these years," said Mary to herself, when her mistress was safe among the Florida orange-groves, "and I'll make it my business to see that she never makes a cent of profit out of all her fine new arrangements. She shall be glad to let me have it yet."

So, upon one pretext and another, she had contrived to attach herself to the household of every tenant of Ivy Lodge, and, one by one, had succeeded in frightening them away, until Mrs. Clare's spirit and presence of mind had so unexpectedly conquered her treacherous plans.

Mary Moore left Middle Marshes quietly, and at once. And the ghost of Ivy Lodge never appeared again.—Amy Randolph, in N. Y. Ledger.

OUR SCHOOL-GIRLS.

Some Hints That Young Ladies Would Do Well to Heed.

The average school-girl rises only in time to eat a hurried breakfast and reach school at nine, says the Christian Register. The girls under twelve, who are not the ones that break down, are not too dignified to romp at recess, and in that way they fill their lungs with fresh air every day. Those about twelve or thirteen rarely have a breath of outside air from nine to two in the afternoon. They eat their luncheons curled up in heaps in comfortable corners if they can find them. They take little exercise, except in a few schools, where they dance for a few minutes. A solitary lunch of cold or "warmed over" food on reaching home is followed usually by an hour or two of study instead of by a brisk walk or other exercise. There is more study after supper, ambitious girls studying late in the evening. If there is any well-established physiological fact it is that girls in their teens need an abundance of sleep, and sleep before midnight, if possible. The teachers must give a certain amount of home work to their pupils in order to keep them up to the grade, more is the pity, but, since that is a necessity, the fathers and mothers at home should make every thing else bend to that and health. There is no one thing that is so necessary and that might be so easily secured, if firmness were exercised, as a long night of sleep for the fast-growing brain and the girlish frames that are rapidly assuming the proportions of maturity.

JUVENILE FLIRTATION.

The Stick of Candy Given by the Small Boy to the Small Girl.

She is just the sweetest child that ever was born, says the San Francisco Chronicle. She has Titian red hair, and ivory skin, and blue eyes, and when she grows up she will make the men stand around. Then she will marry a plain, bald-headed man, and be lost to the beautiful world, and people will wonder why such a beautiful girl should throw herself away. Because she has sense, and no woman of sense would marry a man as good-looking as she was. But she is only two years old yet; yet she is simply the sweetest thing that ever lived. No. It is not her "mother says so." It is her godmother; and if it comes to that, a godmother can think more of her godchild than the real, simple, plain, ordinary mother. Every child should have a godmother. It is better than being born with a "caul." Perhaps you doubt this godmother's word. But she must have been a pretty child, for her mother took her in the car one day and she dropped her two-year-old blue eyes on a small boy a trifle older who sat opposite with his mother. The small boy fell at her glance, not by that furtive look at her and an uneasy movement that marks a man when he has been hit by a girl in a car and wants to look and doesn't like to because he thinks every body will notice. The small boy simply gazed at the beautiful child and after a little hesitation he walked over boldly and put into her hand a lovely stick of candy. A boy must have been smitten when he did that. A man may be foolish and give away things to a girl and not be much smitten after all, but when a boy gives up his candy he is clean gone. The small beauty took it and gave him a smile which made him palpably thrill. There was no mistaking his satisfaction. The child held the candy for a few seconds. Then she said:

"Mamma, may I eat this candy?"

"No, dear. It isn't pretty to eat candy on a car."

"Well, mamma, may I kiss it?"

The old, old story.

An Interesting Subject.

A miner in Rhonda named David Davies is just now an interesting subject for medical doctors and doctors of divinity. He was a victim of the terrible explosion of Pen-y-Craig in 1880. He was bedridden for four years, recovered sufficiently to be able to go about, but was completely deaf and dumb. His doctor hit upon a novel plan to restore his hearing. He was placed by the side of a big gun during target practice. After the sixth shot his hearing came suddenly back to him but he remained dumb. The other day one of his companions said something to him that put him in a towering passion and his speech returned in a flood of profanity.

Students are requested to ask for proofs of the following facts: That after acting as Head Master for a year in Smythe street Academy, Wakefield, he resigned receiving a flattering testimonial and presentation. For eight years after he was Head Master in St. Charles' Grammar School, London, and on his resignation in 1883, he received the highest possible testimonial from his managers. Two years later, on resigning his appointment as Science Lecturer, and First Classical Master in St. Cuthbert's Grammar School, Newcastle, the Lord Bishop of Newcastle, Canon Ramsay, and the managers gave him their highest commendation. After this he became Principal of the New Cross High School, and of Bath House College, Twickenham. From successful students preparing for Cambridge, London, Durham, Trinity, Edinburgh Universities; the Law, Medical, Local, Army, Engineering College, and Science examinations, about 50 letters are open to inspection.

Students can take Single Class Subjects, or the Course, and payments will be monthly.

A large number of Rooms are Furnished FOR BOARDERS.

As a teacher Mrs. Pegg holds the certificate of the Lords of the Council on education, England; First Class Kindergarten, Singing, and Science Certificates; and for about 20 years (10 as Head Mistress) was employed in the largest schools in England.

Evening Classes in all Subjects will be commenced at 7 p. m., on Monday, Nov. 10th.

MAKING VIRTUE A NECESSITY.

While the News, prior to the last sitting of the House, was not an Opposition organ, it was not afraid to say things that would embarrass the Government. Supporting the administration generally, it nevertheless reserved the right of free speech, and conformably with this reservation, a reservation for which none of its local contemporaries are especially distinguished, it temperately, but forcibly called attention to certain reforms, and among these the mining laws. That, therefore, the News did point out that "it was practically useless to expect any large development of the mining industry," etc, is strictly correct, but that the Government in convening the present mining commission had the News' "suggestion" especially in mind is another question. Other papers than the News published suggestions to a similar purport. It might have been, indeed, to put it as modestly as possible, that the Government had in mind some of the suggestions of the TIMES. But be that as it may, the TIMES does not grudge the News the influence it alleges itself to possess. If in convening the mining commission the "suggestion" of the News was ringing in the ears of the Government, we have another instance of the influence of the press, and the TIMES, as a constituent feature thereof, has nothing to offer but its congratulations. Not so, however, with the Telegram, which, it may be added in point of political exemplification is neither flesh, fish nor fowl. That sheet, whose political lucubrations are distinguished chiefly for the paucity of their wit, is incensed at the brazen effrontery of the News in its assumption that its "suggestion" had been acted upon by the Government. In the attitude of the Telegram we have an exhibition of feeling not far removed from envy. To emulate the Telegram in its propensity for retailing apposite tales, we are reminded of the Fox and the Grapes. But it is no part of our programme to interpose a defence for the News. That paper is quite able to defend itself. In its delightfully egotistic way it will make envy its theme, and point to the attitude of the Government in relation to its "suggestion" as furnishing good collateral proof of the correctness of its assumption. It is undeniable that the Government have adopted the policy of the Opposition. Finding that they must either go or adopt the policy of their opponents, they chose the latter course. They have made virtue a necessity. We have, in fact, in the contemplated reforms of the Government an eleventh hour repentence, with the Telegram, the World, the Truth and the Colonist standing by in the capacity of comforters. This repentance may be sincere, but we are unable to see how it can be. Spiritually a repentence of this kind might avail something, politically, however, while it may serve to postpone the hour of vengeance it affords no guarantee of forgiveness. Eleventh hour repentances are essentially selfish. The public are not to be caught with the chaff of these tardy recantations of error. The Government cannot decently plead in this case that they erred through ignorance. For years they have been warned by friends as well as foes of the error of their policy. They were told time and again that the current of public opinion was setting in against them. These warnings, however, were disregarded. The Premier, with a fatuity incomprehensible in a man whose business it is to acquaint himself with public opinion, distinctly averred a few weeks before the last election that seven-eights of the electorate were in accord with his policy. Need it be observed that this inability to guage public opinion must have resulted from opaque ignorance, and from a sort of a moral shortsightedness it would be difficult to parallel? Admonished by the result of the elections, the Government proceeded to ask what they should do to be saved, and with a foxiness which some people are simple enough to rate as wisdom, they promptly decided to steal the thunder of their opponents. In this we have a moral as well as a political surrender. We have the hypocritical whine, "we have repented, we will accept any policy, no matter what, provided you concede us possession of the flesh pots." This in plain English is the attitude of the Government to-day, and the public is asked to give them their confidence on the strength of it. The TIMES sees no virtue in a repentance of this kind. It is, in fact, an insult to the common sense of the electorate. A bunko game is not worse from a moral point of view. There should be no compromise, no hope or comfort held out to this quintette of political "confidence men."

RESPONSIBLE GOVERNMENT.

It has been well said that "eternal vigilance is the price of freedom." The early pioneers of this Province, after years of agitation and struggle, obtained "Responsible Government," which when properly administered is a great boon. But when through selfishness and corruption the management of public affairs falls into the hands of incompetent and unscrupulous men, whose actions are chiefly guided by their cupidity, the public interests become a prey to ringsters and boodlers. The remedy for this state of things rests mainly with the people themselves reflected through their representatives in the Legislature.

Judging from the views expressed by many of the members elect to the new House, a different state of affairs from that which was so prevalent in the last will prevail.

Government by caucus has had its quietus, and the member of the Legislature who goes into a government caucus to assist them to frame a policy will be a doomed man politically. The executive will be expected to perform their functions constitutionally and the Legislature will pass upon their acts sitting in their places in the House of Assembly. A servile majority ready and willing to do the bidding of the executive and whitewash all their deeds of omission and commission will be a thing of the past. When members of the executive assume legislative functions, which the law does not give to them, and the Legislature allows such conduct to pass unpunished, or when members of the assembly assume executive duties without the responsibility of office, or the endorsation of their constituents constitutionally expressed, the state becomes practically governed by an oligarchy more tyrannical to those who disapprove of its methods than the worst form of government existing in the older European countries. When Responsible Government is thus administered unchecked by the representatives of the people it becomes a curse instead of a blessing, more especially in a Province geographically large but sparsely populated.

USURPATION.

The Opposition for some years urged the Government to so amend the Land Act and other Statutes so as to stop the acquisition of large tracts of Crown lands by speculators, who simply withdrew the best agricultural lands from cultivation by the actual settler, and the timber lands from the bona fide mill owners who were manufacturing lumber in the Province. The Government were also urged to legislate so as to make the withholding of such lands from settlement and use unprofitable. They, however, resisted this, and by the aid of a servile majority in the Assembly burked all enquiry into the subject by delaying to place necessary information before the members, and by resorting to means of which they are proficient. They also expressed the view that it was in the interest of the Province that its Crown lands should be disposed of as rapidly as possible, so as to make them revenue producing by being subject to taxation. This was the Government land policy, in brief, down to the day the last legislature was dissolved. The general election convinced the Government that they were not in touch with the people upon this question, but that the policy of the Opposition in respect to the Crown lands was the policy of a majority of the people. Instead of Mr. ROBSON and his colleagues adhering to their convictions of "sound policy," which had been parctised by them for some years, they ignominiously abandoned them, in order to retain their salaries and positions. In doing so, however, they have blundered as usual, and in avoiding Charybdis have shipwrecked on Scylla. In July last they passed one of their world-wide famous "Orders in Council," purporting thereby to stop the operation of certain sections of the Land Act, which they themselves had asked the Legislature to make law. It must be obvious to the most shallow observer or pap-fed organ that in the absence of any legislative [illegible] such an Order-in-Council is waste paper. If an Order-in-Council of this kind could have any legal value, the annual meeting of the legislature is an expensive farce, for if the executive can change and amend the land laws by an Order-in-Council in the absence of express power to do so, they can amend any other statute by the same process. We should not be surprised at their claiming the power to amend the Constitution, abolish the legislature and make themselves executive councillors for life. That would be a wise card for them to play. Instead of allowing the legislature to meet and make unpleasant enquiries. If they can by an Order-in-Council suspend the operation of a portion of the land law, which enabled speculators to acquire thousands of acres of the most valuable lands, they can by an Order-in-Council suspend the sections under which a settler pre-empts 160 acres. That the Government do not possess this power is indisputable, and we are convinced that no member of the Legislature who votes from conviction will say that any Government should. That the Legislature will be surrendering one of their most valuable and essential prerogatives if they allow this bold effort to grasp and usurp legislative authority by the Executive, to pass without the severest censure, is obvious. What use will there be in having thirty-three members, if five of them, during the recess, sitting with closed doors in the executive council chamber, can stop the operation of their statutes and their work by an Order-in-Council. We contend that the Land Act should have been amended on the recommendation of the Executive to the Legislature years ago, that it should have been done last session, and the wholesale spoliation of the Crown lands put a stop to legally, that the Order-in-Council purporting to stop this state of things is a nullity. Any person who complies with the conditions as laid down in the "Land Act" can to-day obtain the Crown lands just as readily as they could before the Order-in-Council of last July was passed. If the land office authorities refused to issue grants to persons complying with the law as it stands, an application to the courts would no doubt compel them to administer the law as the Legislature enacted it. Great injury, confusion and expense may thus result from the neglect of the Government to amend the land law when the House was in session. It is useless to attempt to justify this usurpation on the plea that the end justified the means, as capable Government would have seen and known that the act was wrong, and have amended it in a legal manner at the proper time.

DRILL SHED OR ARMORY.

Unless the City Council are prepared to offer cogent reasons for refusing to appropriate $5000 toward a Drill Shed, they should promptly turn in and vote the amount. The city can well afford it, nay more, $10,000 might be appropriated without incurring serious pecuniary stress. Perhaps the coldness with which the city fathers view the project is owing to the name. Drill Shed is suggestive of wood shed, whither, it may be supposed, an alderman must occasionally repair as do common people to split kindling wood. Since possibly, therefore, to the aldermanic mind there are disagreeable associations connected with the term Drill Shed, we suggest that Col. PRIOR call it an Armory and perhaps the aldermaniac bosom will warm toward the scheme. Seriously, though this city should have a Drill Shed or in other words an Armory, not for the express purpose of drilling, but for social recreations, and for public meetings. Victoria gives from two to three big balls yearly, and an Armory or a Drill Shed, whichever you may please to call it, might properly be made to combine a dancing and banqueting hall, a hall for public meetings, and we dare say that the colony of bicyclists in this city would be glad to utilize it during the winter months. We know of no good reason why the city should not appropriate $5000 toward a Drill Shed per se, but if it can be so arranged that a rendezvous of this kind could be utilized for the purposes we have enumerated, there should be no hesitation in making the appropriation, and in fact it might be doubled with advantage. The Aldermen, it might be supposed, before retiring into private life, if such they contemplate, would be anxious to commemorate their incumbency with other than evidences of broken stone, a fresh supply of which we note has been dumped at the corner of the Pritchard House.

EDITORIAL NOTES.

British agents in the United States and Canada, says the Naval Review, are reported to be negotiating for an immediate supply of nickel ore for the use of the British navy. No fear is expressed at the Navy Department of a corner in nickel, but it is believed that the present great demand for the metal will keep its price at a remunerative figure, notwithstanding Secretary TRACY'S energetic measures in securing an appropriation of $1,000,000 for nickel. It is recognized that already the British Admiralty is abreast with the United States Navy Department in the race for metal.

What does this indicate? asks the Illustrated American. Henry Cassin, a New York bell-boy, robbed a safe, was arrested, and said: "I'll take my bitten years—and I'll never squeal. I'll hide my pile, and when I get out I'll know just where to find it, and I'll be able to live like a gentleman. I've made a good deal more money than I could earn honestly in ten years." It means that the fellow is a philosopher. It means that the boy has recognized the fact that the almighty dollar counts for everything; that he has ascertained that money commands the outward show of respect; that it guarantees comfort, pleasure and social recognition whatever the moral standing. Society is responsible for the philosophy of this bell boy. Not until society refuses to recognize wealthy scoundrels will men and bell boys cease to turn a dishonest penny.

The Miner, says the Globe, a paper printed at Nelson, B. C., laments the fact that the new State of Washington, better known as Washington Territory, has completely outstripped British Columbia. The climate and soil are very much alike and the laws do not differ materially, yet Washington has "six people to British Columbia's one; she has an assessed valuation of thousands to British Columbia's hundreds; she has ten farms and stock ranches to British Columbia's one; although the mining industry is of more recent origin in Washington, it is now far greater than the same industry in British Columbia." The Globe accounting for the causes of Washington's progress, remarks that it is due in the main to the fact that it has not been severed from the continent, but on the contrary allowed to trade freely with the largest single free trade area in the world. This is the prime secret of the wonderful growth of the new regions in the States as compared with the far slower progress of places like Manitoba and British Columbia. Cut off Washington or Dakota and build a customs cordon round them, and they would at once feel the disastrous consequences.

What it costs to be a successful man; in the sense of becoming famous, is well illustrated in the case of Dr. KOCH. Dr. KOCH, says a brother of his own now living in St. Louis, Mo., devoted his hours of leisure to study and observation instead of at hunting and fishing as did his companions. One of his famous pastimes was to study lichens and mosses under the microscope. At seventeen he had completed his course in the high school of Clansthal, Hanover, but was unable to enter the University of Gottingen until he was eighteen. At the University he wrote a prize essay in the second year, taking it away from hundreds of senior students. His course as a physician at Posen, where he first began the study of bacteria, his service during the Franco-German war, his investigation and establishment of the cholera germ, are all matters of record." The study of the lives of famous men shows conclusively that they owe their success to industry rather than that vague quality known as genius. We do not urge that success awaits every man who has a mind to study, but we do lay stress on the point that those who would succeed must study. Knowledge, every time, is the foundation of success.

"In England," says the Montreal Herald, "they are beginning to find out Sir JOHN MACDONALD. His speech near Halifax a short time ago was promptly dealt with by the London press, and we see that an important journal, the Railway News, is opening its eyes. The journal says:

It is something startling to hear of the Premier, Sir John Macdonald, holding up his hands in pious horror at the iniquity of the States in passing the McKinley tariff, while altogether ignoring the existence of a similar fiscal policy inaugurated by himself in Canada. There is a touch of the "Pecksniff" in his denunciation of "the ignorance and vice" which in the United States have passed the new tariff, and the pleasant dream of the Dominion sitting "calmly and quietly under the British flag, and looking with philosophy upon the struggles of a fierce democracy." Who could suppose that this unctuous Premier congratulating himself and his hearers that they were not like other men across the frontier, was himself the advocate and founder of a system of prohibition and protection which was directed against the exclusion from his country of the produce of the mother country, under whose flag it is his delight to sit in tranquil security and philosophic ease?

DISCRIMINATING TAXATION.

TO THE EDITOR:—I notice that in the case of the City Corporation versus J. P. Walls, in which the corporation sued a practising solicitor for recovery of a license fee, judgment has been rendered for the defendant. It is a pity that the reasons for this decision were not made public; for thereon rests very important considerations. Under the circumstances, however, I presume the judgment has been rendered on the ground that the collection of such a tax is ultra vires. The question then arises is the act contrary to law only in so far as it applies to lawyers, or does it apply equally to all trades and callings? If the latter, then as a matter of fact the city of Victoria has for a number of years been collecting the great bulk of its revenue illegally, and the development of this fact opens up an elongated vista of irregularities and illegalities that will be very difficult to rectify.

But I do not think that the decision just rendered implies this; but the disability on the part of the corporation applies only to the collection of a tax from the legal profession. And here naturally follows the question: Why is it so? Why should the legal profession be absolved from paying a tax for the privilege of following a vocation, in preference to any other calling? Why should the merchant, the trader, the tradesman, aye, and even the itinerant vendor and occasional drummer be mulcted in a fee for the privilege of earning a living, and the lawyer be absolved therefrom. It cannot be because the lawyer is a more necessary institution than the trader, or that he confers more benefit on the the community than the manufacturer. [illegible] absolution be granted? There appears but one solution to my view—that the lawyers are a privileged class, and as such are not amenable to the law.

I say privileged advisedly; for over and above their freedom from taxation to which all other callings are subject, have they not further secured themselves against that free trade in the practice of their profession which, with the exception of the medical fraternity, is open to all other callings, where the individual comes accredited with certificates of his proficiency? Have not the lawyers formed themselves into a society, governed by rules and regulations and by-laws; and will not that society prevent a non-union lawyer—that is, one who has not conformed to the rules and regulations of the union—from practicising his profession? Compare this with the case of the craftsmen or workmen who have learnt their business or handicraft, and who also have formed themselves into unions for mutual protection. In the former case the combination is sustained and supported by the law; in the latter, we are told that while working men have a perfect right to form unions, they have no power to interfere with the rights and privileges of those who may differ from them, or to join their union. Does not this savor greatly of class legislation.

One thing, however, must follow from the decision just rendered. The whole obsolete system of taxation now in vogue in this city must make place for a more just and simple method, for independent of its obnoxiousness, it cannot be tolerated that a system of collecting the revenue shall continue that distinguishes between one class of citizens and another.

JUSTITIA.

THAT VERDICT.

TO THE EDITOR:—In your Editorial Notes mention is made of Sproule and Birchall. One was hanged on "evidence which entitled him to a life sentence," and the latter met "a similar fate on the strength of evidence which a great many people thought entitled him to escape the gallows." Taking these things into consideration and looking at the last assizes: a Chinaman, who without doubt foully murdered his countryman, is let off with ten years' penalty. Had an Indian, a native of the soil, who in many cases have been badly treated, or a white man done so he would be hanged. Judge Begbie and jury puzzled many in the decision they gave, "manslaughter." Had it been manslaughter and in self-defence, was it not deposed by Dr. Milne that the blow on the head was sufficient? If so, what was the cause of so much butchery, and the hiding of the body afterwards.

QUEER LEGAL MANNERS.

An Astoria Justice Holds Court at Two in the Morning.

PORTLAND, Nov. 26.—The after-math of the Gleason-Gannon fight at Astoria last night is highly interesting. Both principals were arrested and taken before Justice of the Peace Cleveland. The latter, who had been present at the fight, agreed to give the men an immediate hearing, and accordingly at 2 o'clock this morning the trial was proceeded with. As the district attorney was unwilling to get up at such a late hour, the Justice of the Peace appointed a young attorney, who is an ardent sport, and who also reported the fight for a local paper, to prosecute the case. Although Gannon did not recover from the knock-out blow for over thirty seconds, no testimony, with the exception of that of the chief of police and the sheriff, was adduced, showing that the contest was anything but a scientific one for points. The witnesses testified that Gannon sank to the floor from sheer exhaustion. Of course every one attending the fight knew better than this, but no one testified to anything different, and at 5 a.m. the defendants were discharged.

Just as the trial was commencing the justice drew a healthy-sized bottle of whiskey from his desk and passed it around.

During a lull in the trial a prominent Portland sport got into a wrangle with an Astoria man over the merits of fighting bantams. A match was proposed by the Portland man, who promptly planked $100 down on the justice's desk. The Astoria man did not have that amount, and was about to decline the match when the judge, who had been until now a silent listener and who knows the merits of the Astoria bird, arose and said: "Here, don't let that bother you. Your bird can win, and I'll lend you $100." The match was forthwith made, and the chief of police who arrested Gleason and Gannon for prizefighting, was appointed stakeholder for the cockfight.

WHARF AND WAVE.

Jottings of Interest to Marine Men Concisely Compiled.

The steamer Daisy brought in two scow loads of lumber to-day from Chemainus.

A large lot of freight for Victoria is being brought in by the Sound and Mainland boats now.

The steamer Rainbow is all right, she having been floated off from where she was ashore, without damage.

The land back of the C.P.N. wharves has been treated to a liberal supply of gravel, much to its improvement.

Fifty-six ships are loading at the various ports in the inland sea, known as the Straits of San Juan de Fuca and its bays.

The new castings for the Mudlark have been completed by the Albion Iron Works and are now being put in position.

A little steamer, the Lord of the Isles, which runs on Salmon river, was accidentally upset and filled the other day, but she has been raised since.

The steamer Mascotte arrived from the Fraser river this morning with 6,000 sacks of oats for Messrs. Brackman & Ker. She was delayed for several days on account of not being able to get off the beach where she went to load.

The British bark Beastield, which has been loading wheat at Tacoma, was towed around to Seattle on Wednesday to finish her cargo. Before she left Tacoma the sailors laid in a stock of whiskey and a big row was on during the trip, which required stringent measures to quell. Capt. Reid says American whiskey is bad for British tars.

Beautiful Women.

The magical efforts of Wisdom's Robertine as a beautifer and preserver of the complexion have been attested by thousands of leading ladies of society and the stage. It is the only article ever discovered which gives a natural and beautiful tint to the complexion, removing tan, sunburn, freckles and all roughness of the face and arms, leaving the skin soft, smooth and velvety. All remarks on its delightfuly cooling and refreshing properties, a distinction not found in any other similar article known. D. E. Campbell, agent.

LAST OPPORTUNITY.

Mr. Seward, the Eminent N. Y. Optician, Preparing to Leave for Home.

Having faithfully promised to be in New York by Christmas, and being obliged to stop for a few days at Portland, Denver, St. Louis, Cincinatti and Washington, Mr. Seward will leave Victoria

Thursday, December 4th.

The prospects are that Mr. Seward will not have time to finish all the work now in sight, before leaving, but if all those intending to call will do so without further delay, he will make the test and finish what he can and send the balance from New York.

Mr. Seward's success has been complete. Hundreds of Victorians have been benefited by his superior skill in adapting glasses, and no failures have been reported.

Mr. Seward's services are in great demand wherever he goes, and it will probably be several years before he will reach this coast again.

Dr. McNaughton Jones, Dr. Milne Dr. Garrow, Postmaster N. Shakespeare, Collector A. R. Milne and hundreds of others now wearing Mr. Seward's glasses speak of the work in the highest terms.

A record of the test and degree of the glasses given in each case is kept on the books for future reference, so that in case of accident, any person can have their glasses duplicated by addressing F. D. Seward, Box 3,567 New York.

Office corner Yates and Douglas sts. 9 a.m. to 5 p.m.; evenings 6:30 to 7:30 p.m., until Thursday December 4th.

For bronchitis and asthma use Langley's Balsam of Aniseed.

A Rugby football game will be played at Beacon Hill, at 3 p.m. sharp to-morrow afternoon between a team of Canadians and all comers.

The chain gang of Seattle went on strike the other day and refused to work on the streets. A judicious diet of bread and water soon brought them to terms.

Eight hundred dollars has been collected in North Saanich for the erection of a new Methodist church to cost $1500. Mr. S. Brethour gave the lot on which to erect.

An Ontario capitalist, Mr. Jas. Corocan, is in British Columbia looking up a site for a large shingle, saw and planing mill. He will be in Victoria in a day or two.

The Chinaman who was sentenced to 10 years' imprisonment for killing a fellow countryman, will be sent to Westminster to-night to be confined in the penitentiary.

Governor Moresby of Westminster has gone to Nelson Island to search for Dineen, the missing timber cruiser, who in a fit of delirium tremens got lost in the woods.

Two Seattle doctors have been charged in the courts there with illegally practising their profession, having no State medical board license. One was fined $50 and costs.

Civic election matters are now engaging the attention of the Vancouverites, and nominations for aldermen have been made. No name for a new mayor has been submitted.

A white tablet with gold letters, has been placed on St. Andrew's Presbyterian Church front, giving to the world notice of the hours of worship and other information of a like character.

W. Smith, construction foreman, of the E. & N. railway, left for Nanaimo yesterday to reconstruct the Chase river bridge, which is a little the worse for wear. Work will be pushed to completion and no delays will be caused.

The examination of the supposed stage robber continues to be the principal theme of conversation at Ashcroft. It is expected that the evidence for the Crown will be all in on Monday next, to which date the examination is adjourned.

In conection with the state of the logging business all the camps are unusually active, especially at this season of the year. None of the camps have yet closed down for the winterand the men have not begun to congregate in the city in any great numbers.

An old lady named Mary Reid, aged 73 years, died at her residence, Dallas Road, early this morning of dropsy. She had been for many years a monthly nurse, and was well known in the city. The funeral takes place to-morrow at 2:30 o'clock from St. James church.

The first train of the New Westminster & Fairhaven railway from the south, entered Blaine yesterday. The Canadian portion of the road will be completed in two weeks, when the grand inauguration will take place with the meeting of the two lines at the boundary.

John Weiler, 51 to 55 Fort street, has just opened his first arrival of library and table lamps for holiday trade. The goods are finished is bisque and decorated to perfection. Also a nice assortment of umbrella lamp shades, all sizes and colors, which are now all the rage.

Among the private re-unions in honor of the American day of thanksgiving, was a pleasant dinner party given by Mr. and Mrs. J. H. Brownlee. Mr. Brownlee is a Dominion land surveyor and civil engineer, who came on a visit to Victoria last spring, and got to like the place so well that he decided to settle here, which he has.

AN IDEAL HUSBAND.

True Womanly Sentiments Expressed by a Milwaukee Girl.

At a gathering of young ladies one evening last week one of them proposed that the party draw up in a circle, and each in turn give her opinion as to the qualifications of an ideal husband. It was immediately agreed to, says the Milwaukee Wisconsin, and oh! the diversity of prerequisites would cause a man to fear and tremble as to his acceptableness even were he an angel sans wings. One wanted a rich man, one a famous one, another a handsome one; some wanted a title, and most of them wanted all these things combined.

At last it came the turn of a sweet, sunny little creature in pink and white. For a moment her face grew serious, and then came her verdict:

"He must be moral, well-bred, and have some fixed and honorable method of making a living."

What! not one word about his being titled, rich or handsome!

"But," she continued, "the man I marry must be my other self. He must be sympathetic with me in my tastes and pursuits. When he comes I shall know him, and all the love I have to give shall be his, and I shall expect love in return for love. Of course, if he is young and rich and handsome so much the better, but I should not love him less were he none of these things."

True womanly sentiments! Would that they could find an echo in every woman's heart. The number of unhappy marriages would be lessened, and divorce unknown. Many, fascinated by outward glamor, rush headlong into matrimony, and too late find that the tastes and inclinations of husband and wife differ as widely as night and day. For instance, one is literary and fond of retirement, the other despises literature and is inclined to society; each will naturally seek the society and conversation of those whose tastes and opinions coincide with his own. The consequence is an estrangement of husband and wife in things the world calls trivial, but which, in reality, decide their happiness; and each would find it easy to sacrifice all the other's charms for the one charm not there, namely, a responsive heart in all things.

No Place for a Doctor

It is a remarkable fact that the city of Truro, in the center of the population of Cornwall, with 11,000 inhabitants—and seven times that number within a few miles—has for many years had but three physicians. When it is considered that here in America there is one doctor to every 500 people, the contrast seems still more wonderful.

Don't Put Food on Tin Plates.

Never put away food in tin plates. Fully one-half the cases of poison from the use of canned goods is because the article was left or put back into the can after using. China, earthenware or glass is the only safe receptacle for "left over."

Explains the Difficulty.

If you want to show your absent friends where you live, or if you want to explain some topographical matter, there is no better way of doing it than by sending one of T. N. Hibben & Co.'s maps. This shows everything in and around Victoria, and explains everything at a glance. Besides the large map, there is one on a smaller scale, price 50 cents, suitable for sending away.

THE QUEBEC SCANDAL.

A FINE SPECIMEN OF THE TORY REPRESENTATIVE.

Tarte Still Unravelling the Alleged Intrigue—Some Curious Correspondence—McGreevy, M.P., in Cahoots with the Department—Public Piracy.

QUEBEC, Nov. 21.—The following is the instalment published by Mr. Tarte, to-day, of his "Lobbies of McGreevy-ism"—

The programme traced out by Michael Connolly—"Stick to Tom, and let yourself be guided by him in all that you do—" was followed to the letter.

The Public Works Department called for tenders for the work in the month of April, and they were forwarded to Ottawa in the beginning of May.

Mr. Robert H. McGreevy became a member of the firm of Larkin, Connolly & Co., with the knowledge and consent of his brother, the Hon. Thomas McGreevy, who, on his part, undertook to get the contract awarded to the firm.

This is the way things were worked: Larkin, Connolly & Co. put in three tenders, which they designated under the titles of—

Tender No. 1—John Gallagher.
Tender No. 2—George Beaucage.
Tender No. 3—Larkin, Connolly & Co.

The Gallagher tender was the lowest, that of Beaucage came next, and Larkin, Connolly & Co.'s was the highest.

The three tenders were prepared by Larkin, Connolly & Co.

Mr. Thomas McGreevy was aware of this circumstance. His letters establish this fact beyond all question and they also prove that he conspired against the public interest and betrayed his trusts as a Harbor Commissioner and a member of Parliament by communicating to the firm of Larkin, Connolly & Co., information calculated to secure to them the contract although they were not the lowest tenderers.

For the better understanding of the complicated intrigue which we have to unravel in this matter, resort must be at once had to the explanations supplied by the Chief Engineer of the Public Works Department on the 13th May last, to the House of Commons. Nothing could seem more plausible than this "memorandum" and yet what is to be thought of it?

In it, Mr. Perley says:—

1. That in three of the tenders, those of Larkin, Connolly & Co., of Gallagher and of Beaucage, a mistake had evidently been made in the price of the street piling.

2. That the prices of this street piling did not agree with the terms of the tender.

3. That, on the 17th of May, he called the attention of Larkin, Connolly & Co., as well as of Beaucage and Gallagher, to the mistake made and asked them to specify a price per lineal foot to enable him to compare their tenders with others which had conformed to the requirements of the form of tender.

4. That Gallagher withdrew his tender on the 18th of May and that he was also allowed to retire his deposit.

5. That Beaucage admitted that he had made a mistake and modified his tender.

6. That Larkin, Connolly & Co. also admitted having made a mistake, but held to their tender.

7. That, after all this had been done, Larkin, Connolly & Co.'s tender was found to be the lowest.

8. That he recommended it to the attention of the Minister.

OTTAWA, May 5.

MY DEAR ROBERT,—I arrived here yesterday all right at 12 p.m., with all the big boys of the Pacific Railway, W. C. Van Horne and others. The commission on the Intercolonial Railway is sitting to-day hearing Duncan McDonald's case, so Bell told me. He says nothing was done in the others since you left. I believe no report will be in for any of them for this session, or for the estimates, only after the close. The tenders for Crosswall only arrived here yesterday and are locked until morning, when he will commence his calculations. I will write Tuesday and let you know the result. Larkin was here yesterday; I told him that it would be useless to get Peters out of the way, as it would be tantamount to giving the contract to the highest tender, and that you would have to stick to Beaucage's tender, as it was fair. Yours truly,

THOS. MCGREEVY.

HOUSE OF COMMONS, May 7th.

MY DEAR ROBERT,—There is nothing new in Intercolonial matter since I wrote you Saturday. I am quite sure now that there will be nothing done for estimates for any of the claims this session, that nothing will be put in until all are finished. Of course, this will meet the requirements of the moment, and the supplementary estimates will be finished in Council to-day and laid before the House to-morrow. That is the last of them. I hope to let you know to-morrow about the result of the Cross wall tenders. Have your arrangements right with Beaucage before the result is known. I will give you timely notice. I think the House will close about the 15th. Enquire how O'Brien is doing, or what is his intention about the work on the examining warehouse. I think if he was promised to be reimbursed he might give it up, and if Charlebois got out of the way it might reach Beaucage's tender, but you must not do it. Murphy might approach O'Brien about the matter, but he would have to promise to get Charlebois away. All the others might be passed over.

I am told that he has done nothing yet. What are you doing about water pipes to Lévis? I wish you would send me the conditions that the work is to be done on. I don't think it will be necessary for you to come here this week. I think I will go to Quebec by the end of this week, and before going fix a day to come back and meet the old fellow on your Intercolonial matter, and have it settled. He has promised to sit down with Clarke and settle the matter after the session. I will ask him before leaving to fix a day and to have Clarke here to finish the report. I will have his answer before I leave. Yours truly,

THOS. MCGREEVY.

THE PROOF "CRUSHING."

The proof supplied by these letters is crushing as regards the facts:—

1st. That Mr. McGreevy very well knew that his brother was interested in the "Cross Wall" tenders. If not, why should he have written to him in the sense that he did? Why did he communicate to him the information necessary to guide Larkin, Connolly & Co.? Why did he render him an account of his interviews with the head of the firm, Mr. Larkin?

2nd. That he knew that Beaucage's tender was in reality the property of Larkin, Connolly & Co., seeing that he told Larkin that the firm of Larkin, Connolly & Co. would be obliged to stand to that tender, which was No. 2 of the combination.

3. That he was in illegal and illicit relations with some one in the Public Works Department, since on the 5th May he informed his brother, and through him the firm of Larkin, Connolly & Co., that some one would commence his calculations, two days afterwards, and that he would know the result, and since, on the 7th May, he hoped to know that result the next day.

4. That he was perfectly well aware that Beaucage's tender was a blind and an instrument in the hands of Larkin, Connolly & Co., and that he was conversant beforehand with all the arrangements that had been made on the subject since he wrote "See that all your arrangements with Beaucage are correct before the result is known."

5. That he, a Member of Parliament and a Harbor Commissioner, undertook to furnish information to contractors before the official result was known, in order to favor them. Not a voice will be raised in the country to attempt to justify Mr. McGreevy's conduct.

Henceforward he stands convicted of having lied to the House of Commons, to which he declared that he had no knowledge of his brother's connection with the contracts or the contractors mentioned in the accusation made against him.

Henceforward it is irrefutably proved that he undertook to give up to Larkin, Connolly & Co. the secret of the calculations of the Public Works Department.

I shall prove to-morrow that he did more. J. ISRAEL TARTE.

OFFICIAL U.S. CENSUS.

The Showing by States—New York Leads With Close on Six Millions.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 28.—Superintendent Porter has completed his final determination of the population statistics of the country. The total differs by 141,710 from that contained in the bulletin issued from the census bureau on October 28. This change is due to a correction of the errors of what is termed the first, or rough count, and the addition of names ascertained to have been omitted from the enumeration. The verified population of the United States in 1890 is 62,622,250. By states it is as follows:

CITY AND PROVINCIAL.

HOW HE TRICKED THE CITY.

A Commercial Traveler's Clever Ruse to Avoid the $50 Tax.

So long as the commercial traveler community exists, so long will there be funny stories of funny deeds. The Victoria corporation saw fit to impose a certain tax upon the drummers, and they did not see fit to comply either cheerfully or readily with the imposition. They tried every means of evading payment, but the city had the law on its side, and consequently was victorious. Then the drummers became doctors, politicians, capitalists traveling for pleasure, statesmen, anything rather than drummers. Many were the peculiar scenes between a supposed doctor and the tax collector. Sometimes the deception was discovered, when the money was paid over with many protestations or else the collector was asked to call in an hour. If a boat happened to be leaving about this time, such an opportunity was not lost, although on several occasions the collector was on the scent. One time, though, the collector was nonplussed; he lost track of his man, and sought him in the out-going steamer. No such person was there, although an important looking, bearded stranger who closely resembled the sought one, was on board. The beard made all the difference.

A day or two ago a gentleman, whose ancestral history obviously belonged to the nation of Israel, entered Victoria, and was asked for the inevitable $50. Blank amazement over spread his countenance. Fifty dollars!—do you charge everyone fifty dollars who comes here to see your city? I'll go away immediately; I haven't seen anything yet, so you can't charge me. The matter was smoothed over, and Mr D—— stayed. Next day he took a city merchant for a buggy drive outside the city limits. In the parlor of a suburban hostelry the stranger talked many hundreds of dollars' worth of business, closed the sale and returned home. He wanted to know how about the collection of the $50 when he got back.

What the Miner Thinks About It.

Premier Robson has called to Victoria a number of men interested in mining to act as a commission to frame a mineral act that will be in accord with the necessities of the mining industry as a legitimate business. J. M. Kellie, member-elect from West Kootenay, is one of the the members, the names of the others not being known here. The intent of the present act is good, no doubt; but the trouble is, the average miner cannot understand its intent. The act should be divided into separate and distinct acts, namely: (1) Defining the duties and powers of gold commissioners and mining recorders; (2) Relating entirely to quartz claims; (3) Relating entirely to placer and hydraulic claims; (4) Relating entirely to water rights. If this be done, in future there would be no difficulty in determining whether a section was applicable or inapplicable to this or that branch of the mining business. There need be no radical departures from the present laws and usages. The main thing required is, protection to the claim-owner who is honestly and faithfully endeavoring to comply with the intent of the law. Jumping should be made impossible. So, also, litigation. The duties and powers of the gold commissioner should be so defined that he would be the final arbitrator in all disputes arising as to the priority of location, boundaries of claims, and claim-owners' rights generally. Licenses should only be required of the person locating ground, not of the miner or mine-laborer working for wages. The present law is manifestly unjust and unfair in compelling a man working in a mine to pay a tax not demanded of a man working at any other trade. But, by all means, make jumping and expensive litigation impossible.

Calling in the aid of a commission to frame needed mining legislation is an evidence that John Robson does not propose to let go his grip in running the provincial government. He is shrewd enough to see that the men who follow the mining industry are an influential class in the body politic, and broad guage enough to help it along. While this ambition to retain power may be gratified, he will find that the able Independents and members of the Opposition will not allow him to enact any such vicious legislation as that of the royalty clause in the present "Railway Aid Act." Mr. Robson will not only show his wisdom but prove that he has the best interests of the people at heart if he secures the immediate repeal of that clause.

Reads Funny.

Newspaper writers, or more correctly reporters, do not have time as a rule to be particular about very exact phraseology, although they generally get there in the matter of news. A few instances of how curiously sentences often read in the dailies is offered.

"He was injured in the fracas."
"She fainted upon his departure."
"She whipped him upon his return."
"He was shot in the suburbs."
"He kissed her back."
"The gentleman sat down upon his being asked."
"He kissed her passionately on her reappearance."

Birthday Party.

A very pleasant few hours were spent at Mr. Chas. F. Gardiner's residence, Labouchere street, last evening by a party of friends. The gathering was in honor of the birthday of Mrs. Gardiner, nee Pauline, and the occasion was a very enjoyable one. The early hours of the evening were passed in dancing, cards, etc. At midnight an elegant lunch was partaken of, and after the good things had been disposed of, the health of the hostess was drunk heartily by all. An hour or two more soon flew pleasantly away, and the merrymakers left, hoping one and all that the birthdays of Mrs. Gardiner will be many and pleasant ones.

The Dog Poisoner.

Mr. M. J. Conlin mourns the loss of his dog "Cribs," so well known to hundreds in Victoria. Poor Cribs was found dead and cold by his master the other morning, and bore all the appearances of having been poisoned. Mr. Conlin thought a great deal of his four footed companion, and would not have sold him for a big sum of money. Cribs' antics, when alive, were amusing, and although always ready to make friends with such as he considered worthy of the honor, he carried himself with a certain doggish dignity, comical to see. If the party who poisoned Cribs can be found out, a very interesting interview is promised him by Mr. Conlin.

The Man Weighed, Not His Title!

I weigh the man, and not his title; 'tis not the king's stamp can make the metal heavier or better. Your lord is a leaden shilling, which you bend every way, and debases the stamps he bears. —Wycherly. "Diamond Dyes" have been weighed in the test scales of experimental experience, and have never been cast aside or rejected. The ladies have not simply judged them by their titles which they justly claim. They have given satisfaction in the most crucial tests, and their grand results have called forth the admiration of all. Not so with common imitation package dyes; they bear a stamp and various high-sounding names, but deceive in work, and cause ruin to materials, and discord and discontent in every family who use them.

The Auction Sales Bargains.

Some days ago the TIMES drew attention to one of the jewellery auction sale "bargains," which had come to light in Vancouver. The following letter appearing in The Telegram, explains the matter fully:

TO THE EDITOR OF THE TELEGRAM:

Sir,—For the benefit of my fellow-workmen please insert the following. Messrs. C. & J. Allen have refused to me, through my solicitor, the sum of forty-three dollars ($43), which amount I paid to them for a watch which they guaranteed to me in writing to be gold, and which, according to test, has turned out to be not as represented.

I understand that an assay or test was made by Dr. Bredemeyer of a case which they claim to be of the same material as the one sold to me for gold, and which was only four and four-fifths carats, and the half case which was tested by Dr. Bredemeyer only contained sixty-nine cents' worth of gold.

I, for one, do not intend to purchase any more watches under such representations. EDWARD IRVINE,
A Longshoreman.
Vancouver, B.C., Nov. 21, 1890.

Only One Crowd.

A little cabin near Sayward's mill was the scene last evening of quite a little fracas, between a crowd of young halfbreeds, who had been doing away with liquor that to the taste of a white man would not be worth the trouble of drawing the cork. But they enjoyed it and were having a grand time when a telephone message was forwarded to the police station to the effect that a girl was being killed on Constance street. When Officer Irving arrived the fracas had ended, and stretched out on the floor in a swoon was a young halfbreed girl named Kitty Davis. When she had come to she charged Moses Andrews, one of the inmates of the cabin, with having assaulted her, and he was called to answer to that charge in the police court this morning. In answer to the query of the clerk as to whether he was guilty or not, the prisoner answered, "I don't know nothing about it." His honor took the prisoner's answer the way it was meant and not by the grammatical rule, which makes an affirmative out of two negatives, and so the case was proceeded with. The prosecutrix, who is a girl of about 15 years, and her sister and the prisoner lived in the cabin. He was drunk last evening, and kicked and struck her. The prisoner started to make a rambling statement, which his honor took as "whisky talk," so the prisoner was remanded to jail to sober up.

The other man found in the cabin was charged with being drunk, but the case would not hold good, as it was shown that the man had been put out of a private house and then arrested, which is not allowed by law, except in the case of Indians.

THE SECOND CHAPTER.

Daley Taken to the Hospital by Mr. Waitt ---To be Prosecuted.

The matter of the terrible charges against J. J. Daley in last night's TIMES was freely discussed on the streets to-day, and many queries as to his whereabouts were made. Various reports were rife, but the facts, as taken up from the hour of going to press last evening are as follows:

When Mr. M. W. Waitt saw the article in the TIMES, it was his first intimation of trouble, and being a heavy creditor, he at once took measures to protect his interests. A man was set to watch the store, and Daley was interviewed by Mr. Waitt. Daley agreed to make over the business to Mr. Waitt. This was done, and this morning, seeing that Daley was ill, the shock of exposure having evidently stunned him, Mr. Waitt sent the unfortunate man to St. Joseph's hospital, where he now is. Speaking of Daley, Mr. Waitt said: "I always thought he was a hard-working and energetic young man, and found him prompt in his payments, and a man of his word. His business was a good one, and he should have been making money. I was surprised when I saw by the TIMES that charges of such a nature had been laid."

Mr. A. Gregg, whose daughter has been placed in such an unfortunate position by Daley's duplicity, says he shall do all that money can do to have Daley punished. He has placed the matter in the hands of his solicitors, and Mrs. Daley of New Zealand will probably be brought here to lay the charge of bigamy in a formal manner. "I am fully determined to have Daley punished for his crime," said Mr. Gregg. "I at first thought I might let the matter drop, and leave Daley to the mercy of his own conscience, but I have since decided to follow the matter up, so that my daughter who has been so deeply wronged, may in a measure be put right before the world."

Harmless, safe for children, Langley's Balsam of Aniseed.

NOT FREQUENTLY.

The Lawyers Have Not Often Paid the License Fee Under Protest.

City Treasurer Kent wishes to contradict a published statement which conveys the idea that legal firms have frequently paid the license fee under protest. Far from it being a frequent matter, only one firm paid under protest, this being Drake, Jackson & Helmcken.

Treasurer Kent says that the first firm asked for payment was the Attorney-General. Of course he paid. Then Messrs. Eberts & Taylor, city barristers, were asked for payment, and as they were the city lawyers, no objection was made on their part. Here, however, all payments stopped. Mr. S. P. Mills refused to pay, and then it was decided by Mr. Kent to make a test case of the matter, and Mr. J. P. Walls, secretary of the Law Society, was summoned before the county court, and the case was decided in favor of the barristers, Chief Justice Begbie dismissing the case. Mr. Kent brought the matter to the higher court at once to save the city expense.

MURDER AT NANAIMO.

A Quarrel Over Cards Ends in a Killing---Murderer Captured.

The quiet of yesterday afternoon was disturbed at Nanaimo by a bar-room murder, whereby one James Marshall, a single man 33 years of age, was deprived of his life by an Italian named S. Luperini. An eye witness to the crime says:—

There were four men named George Dunbar, — Whitfield, J. Marshall, (the murdered man) and S. Luperini (the murderer) who were playing a four-handed game of "seven-up" for the drinks. J. Marshall and S. Luperini had a bet on the side of $1.50 each, the stakes of $3 lying on the table. At the conclusion of the game a squabble arose, and Luperini grabbed the $3. Marshall immediately endeavored to regain the $3 by force, and waited on the other side of the table for the purpose of striking Luperini. The latter, however, quickly pulled out a revolver, and without waiting to deliberate, fired a shot at Marshall, who immediately fell to the ground, exclaiming: "He's killed me." These were the last words the murdered man uttered and expired in about ten minutes after. The shot entered his left side, just a little above the hip, from which the blood flowed freely for a few minutes, but soon ceased when life was extinct.

The murderer, Solferini Luperini, (an Italian), has not long been out of jail, where he served a term of six months imprisonment for robbery and seduction of his cousin. He is a small set man of about forty years of age, black hair tinted with grey, sbre eyes, one of which appears to be closed, speaks very [illegible] dresses in a costlier suit of clothes with a hat slouched over his eyes.

LATER—A telegraphic dispatch from Nanaimo this afternoon says that Luperini was captured this morning by a civilian.

Doubling up.

Messrs. Muirhead & Mann are making extensive additions to their planing mills on Constance street, which will be able next season to turn out almost double what was done last year. A building as large as the old one is being erected and when completed will make the largest planing mill in the Province.

The Municipal Elections.

To-morrow noon is the limit allowed householders to register as voters in the municipal elections. It may not be generally known, but it is nevertheless a fact, that unless householders register afresh each year they are disqualified from voting, and their names will not appear on the list of voters for municipal government.

Taken Passage to Utah.

Dr. T. S. Bulmer, who threatened proceedings for criminal libel against another physician of this city, took a ticket over the Union Pacific road last Saturday, for Utah. He was seen at Tacoma on Tuesday, and that was the last heard or seen of him. He left word here that he was going to Seattle for a couple of days on business. Mrs. Bulmer is still here.

Diamond Palace.

Mr. A. A. Clayton, who recently purchased Mr. W. H. Pennock's interest in the jewelry business of Pennock & Clayton, has re-christened the store, and it is now known as the "Diamond Palace." A large and varied stock of holiday goods is displayed, and none but skilful and competent workmen are employed in the manufacturing and repair department. Chronometers cleaned and rated a speciality. Mr. Clayton guarantees satisfaction to all customers.

Nov.20-1mo.

A Peculiar Formation.

In his recent trip to Comox, Dr. West was given some peculiar, and at the same time pretty, natural formations found by John Campbell of Texada Island (the Cameron claim). It was taken from a depth of twenty feet below the surface, and at an elevation of 500 feet above sea level. The largest specimen will be presented to the provincial museum. It is classed as Limonite, a variety of hydrated peroxide of iron of the Hæmatite group, occurring in veins or nests in rocks of various ages, frequently found in ore mines or caves in uniform or halactitic brittle crusts, and is probably combined with arsenic and sulphuric acid.

An Unlucky Sealer.

The sealing schooner Mary Ellen seems to be very unfortunate, for this season she has met with accidents and drawbacks that would almost make a man without an unusual amount of patience give up in despair. She had hardly commenced her spring cruise along the coast, when on account of the actions of her captain, Dan McLean, the crew refused to work, and she had to put in here, where she was delayed for several weeks during the trial of the captain. She left for Behring sea and had an unlucky cruise up the coast. But that was not all, as she ran on the rocks when starting for the sea from a harbor in Alaska. There she laid until the end of the season, when Capt. Victor Jacobson bought her and sent her down here. She arrived here all right and was put on the ways and cleaned up for next season's work, but from the looks of her to-day she will have to undergo another overhauling. The tide was unusually low last night, and this morning instead of floating when it rose, she stayed at the bottom and filled with water. She will be baled out when the tide goes out to-night and will no doubt be all right in the morning.

Guessing Match.

To induce cash trade, Lange & Co., will have another guessing match this year. The gifts given are very elegant and valuable. There will be nine presents.

1st prize—Gent's Gold Watch.
2nd " —Gent's Diamond Ring.
3rd " —Lady's Gold Watch.
4th " —A Silver Tea Set, 4 pieces, engraved.
5th " —A Silver Tea Set, 4 pieces, plain.
6th " —Diamond Scarf Pin.
7th " —Silver Water Pitcher.
8th " —Silver Jewel Case.
9th " —Spoon Holder and ½ doz., Teaspoons.

The nearest guess to the number of shot in the bottle now on view in our store will receive 1st prize; second nearest 2nd prize and so on. One guess will be allowed for every $5 worth of goods purchased. The shot will be counted by a disinterested committee of three on New Year's day; when the prizes will be awarded.

It has One.

Ald. Holland spoke the other night of the need of a coat of arms for the city of Victoria. He might have saved himself the trouble to mention that the city has had a coat of arms for nearly thirty years.

The Last Sad Rites.

The funeral of the late Magdalene Mann took place this afternoon from her late residence 11 Rae street, and was largely attended by ladies and gentlemen who had always found a friend in the deceased. The pallbearers were Jno. Robertson, Alex. Jack, Alex. Wilson, Jas. Muirhead, Thos. Dodds and Wm. McDonald.

The World Enriched.

The facilities of the present day for the production of everything that will conduce to the material welfare and comfort of mankind are almost unlimited and when Syrup of Figs was first produced the world was enriched with the only perfect laxative known, as it is the only remedy which is truly pleasing and refreshing to the taste and prompt and effectual to cleanse the system gently in the Spring time or, in fact, at any time and the better it is known the more popular it becomes.

Rushing the Work.

Messrs. Brackman & Ker are not letting the slightest sign of moss grow on their backs in regard to the erection of their new mills. As soon as the idea of building the mills first struck them they sent east for a competent millwright to arrange the plans, and he no sooner reported than they set to work on the excavations. Now the foundation to what promises to be one of Victoria's chief industries, is being built, and like the firm that are building the mill, it is a good one. Tenders are being called for the erection of a wharf, which will be completed before the mill is in operation.

A Big Crowd Will Go.

The excursion to Port Angeles o Sunday by the Union Pacific steamer Olympian promises to be an enjoyable affair, if the large number who have signified their intention of going keep their word. A large number of tickets have been sold both in this city and Nanaimo and the contigent from the latter city is expected to be unusually large. A special train will leave Nanaimo early in the morning arriving here about 9 o'clock in time to catch the steamer at 9:30. Three brass bands will accompany the excursionists over so that if the weather is a little unpleasant a good time can be had in the cabins.

Mothers!

Castoria is recommended by physicians for children teething. It is a purely vegetable preparation, its ingredients are published around each bottle. It is pleasant to the taste and absolutely harmless. It relieves constipation, regulates the bowels, quiets pain, cures diarrhœa and wind colic, allays feverishness, destroys worms, and prevents convulsions, soothes the child and gives it refreshing and natural sleep. Castoria is the children's panacea—the mothers' friend. 35 doses, 35 cents.

SUCH A JOKE!

Cameron has beaten himself this time. He's sold me goods $2.00 too cheap. I know it, because I priced the same line of goods at another store before going to Cameron's. Ha! ha! ha! ha! he! he! he! ho! ho!

THE JOKE IS

that our much tickled man has paid Cameron's usual price, which is always lower than elsewhere.

The Man that's Beat is the man that has been paying two prices so long that when he gets a fair deal he thinks it's all a mistake.

WHEN IT STRIKES HIM

that, instead of beating us $2.00 now, he's been beaten heretofore on every trade, you'll see that laugh strikes in, like colic. But he'll stick to us now he's tried us.
